Hi Supervisors,

I have a great project for the City of San Diego as Local Arts Agency. I suggest a movie about homeless people, a tragedy. I see the second-to-last scene - a battle scene with a hill. The homeless, finally angered beyond reason, pour over the top in waves with increasing numbers in each wave, holding all sorts of random weapons and shovels and pitchforks. And the Mayor and his henchmen put up a brief resistance then run for their lives. Then the last scene fades to a campaign tent where the Mayor and henchmen discuss how they can make it permanent and what distortions and lies they can use to get their hands on more money.

Do you really want to set people who majorly underfund maintenance in their city (for example) on an arts & culture powertrip?

Seriously, do not encourage their wasteful and inappropriate spending by doing this. Vote 'no.'
