Well, I don't know how good the microbiologist training is if cases of TB on MTS go unreported for months. At least we don't have the plague going around. We also live in fear of recurring infections even if you're vaccinated against it, since the vaccine usually applies to one variant only.

I think the money could be better spent, but this is a good idea, if properly implemented.

It would also be nice if we knew where all of the money was coming from rather than the vague 'health realignment.'
