This proposal is a strong step toward improving fiscal transparency, improving service, and ensuring taxpayers' dollars are used efficiently and effectively. Perhaps the effort could go even further by expanding the scope to incorporate stakeholder and community input.

Small step in the right direction.

How about just hiring an independent auditor to do work like auditing homeless spending, or departments which have multiple perps like Child Welfare or Child Protective Service.

Probably a lot less likely to cover-up for their friends or people they have lunch with every day.

And I know you'd save a lot in damages and legal fees.
