The Escondido building sounds nice. The University Ave. building sounds like it will really overdensify the area. But the bottom line is that both buildings are apparently not going to be finished until the end of the decade.

We have a housing crisis. Act like it. Build units that can go up quickly, before the end of the decade. And I can't imagine how long the waiting list will be by then.

Mark Dorian and I keep suggesting 3-D printed homes, tiny homes, shipping crate homes, even adobe homes. I know of a concrete sack home in Berkeley built years ago. Try it. There are a lot of faster things than homes which won't be ready for 5 years.
