The importance of accessible emergency treatment care has never been greater. It is vital that individual in a mental health crisis are able to get stabilized and begin the process of health. I also strongly believe it is vital to imbed community outpatient care so there is a continual process that ensures on-going treatment. One good example of this is CAL AIM program, which is a Medi-Cal program that provides various levels of treatment to individuals in need of care. As many of you know, a person in crisis often becomes fearful of what may happen to them, having this connection to on-going intensive supportive care in the community, can lessen the need for crisis stabilization. We need to begin to link and customize services so we can provide optimal, efficient, care a the stabilization center and in the community.

The phrasing of single source contract with Sharp for anything mental health related does not sit well with me. I went to a sharp hospital in crisis in April and paid $2k for blood work and a virtual therapy appointment. I would've been better off calling the suicide hotline for free. I went back a few months later following a domestic incident and told 3-4 staff members what happened and they wrote completely incorrect statements in my medical records saying that I broke my finger walking my dog. They said I couldn't have water. They clearly didn't even look to see that my prior record from April referenced domestic issues. Being "treated" at Sharp left me feeling worthless. So I hope you are doing your research and looking for more resources who can support San Diegans in crisis other than Sharp. Thank you.
